Parenting the Internet Generation

Susannah Baldwin, Ph.D.
host of Parent Talk on KWMMR radio, presents -

From toddlers to teenagers our children are growing up on-line. Young children trade dolls and trucks for animated on-line "pets" and interactive games. Adolescents design on-line personas and "hang out" on social networks like Facebook and Myspace. Parents are feeling uncertain and intimidated about parenting in this realm.

Three top authorities on children and technology will discuss on-line life from the young child up through adolescence:

- What are the risks of giving up real play for virtual play?
- What are teens doing in their on line lives and is it healthy?
- What are the real threats and how can we protect our children?
- How should parents be involved in children's on-line life?
- How can we help our kids use this technology constructively?
